

Helpful Thinking Handout

After a disaster you might develop extreme, all black or white ways of seeing yourself and the world, such as seeing yourself as "completely" unable to handle your situation, or seeing the world as "totally" unsafe. While understandable, these habits can make your situation even more difficult to deal with by making you feel overwhelmed or hopeless. People rarely take the time to examine what they are thinking, so unhelpful thoughts just keep happening more or less automatically.

You may find it helpful to become more aware of these unhelpful thoughts and consider whether there are more helpful thoughts to focus on to make it easier to deal with your situation. While your thoughts may be fairly accurate (for example, another flood is likely to occur sometime in the future), the unspoken assumption that you will not be able to handle the next flood is the unhelpful part of the thought. Below are categories of unhelpful thoughts that are common after a disaster, and how these thoughts may make you feel, as well as more helpful thoughts with which to replace them. Once you identify some of the thoughts, the key to helpful thinking is to practice helpful thoughts often during your daily life.

Common Unhelpful Thoughts	Resulting Emotion	Alternate Helpful Thoughts	New Emotional Response
